

Encouraging a love of books and reading . . .

You are your child's first teacher and the experiences you share with your child will set the stage for their future learning successes. Children prepare for learning to read long before they enter school. The early literacy skills they acquire in the years before entering school are vital. Early literacy doesn't require flashcards, memorization, or difficult study times; rather, it is a natural and beautiful consequence of talking together, singing songs or nursery rhymes, and most importantly, sharing books with your child. No amount of expensive videos or educational toys can do a better job of preparing your child to learn than simply sitting down together and sharing books. Here at the Hartland Public Library our goal is to help you find the best books for your family's sharing times.
